CAM350 for Windows, 5.0 (30 votes). Unified Prototyping Environment (UPE) is a graphical programming environment for all kinds of electrical and electronic design. The environment is based on the UNIX-like Z/Architecture with its interpreter/compiler. In the context of electronics it can be seen as an integrated cross-platform programming environment for IC design. The UPE can handle EDA in addition to hardware design and verification, as it is a hardware-software system. UPE offers an integrated work flow from schematic through netlist to layout, including simulation and verification. Its graphical development environment allows rapid prototyping and simulation on the same platform. It is available on i386 and amd64 systems. 10.0 (6 votes). 0.9.0 (See all).
